Stuff Happens with VIXID

Stuff happens... and it's untidy, and freedom's untidy, and free people are free to make mistakes and commit crimes and do bad things.

The American Secretary of Defense, Donald Rumsfeld's famous response to the looting of Baghdad, at a press conference of 11 April 2003, provides the title the play written by David Hare, about the extraordinary process leading up to the invasion of Iraq.

How does the world settle its differences, now there is only one superpower? What happens to leaders risking their credibility with sceptical publics? From events which have dominated international headlines for the last two years David Hare has fashioned both a historical narrative and a human drama about the frustrations of power and the limits of diplomacy.

About VIXID

VIXID, which is headquartered in Paris, was created in 2005 by four mutual friends who wanted to design a video mixing desk. The team of enthusiastic audiovisual experts knew the constraints imposed on audiovisual artists by the latest technologies and wanted to create a tool that would allow mixing videos LIVE. The company has received support from the Paris Développement and Scientipôle Initiative innovation clusters, as well as from public-sector institutions such as OSEO, the French Innovation Agency, the Ile de France Regional Council and the Paris Chamber of Commerce and Industry (CCIP). The company's project has also been recognised by the Cap Digital international competitiveness cluster, which specialises in multimedia content services.
